

About

Sal McKeown,
special needs
journalist

Hi there

This is a bit about me. I'm a freelance journalist from an education background. I have worked for the Workers Educational Association, in schools and FE colleges, for the Open University, three government agencies and a fair few charities too.

I am particularly interested in how computers and the web can make life better for people with disabilities and older people who find reading and keeping in touch a little harder than they used to do.

I write regularly for Teach Secondary, Practical Pre-School magazine and Education Today and have written several books on dyslexia – my specialist subject – and ICT.

I help small companies and charities with their publicity and copy writing and have a good record of producing supplements for magazines and businesses. Recently I have been running media training half days.

Have a look at my website to see samples of my work and get in touch if you think I can help you.

Sal